<<中国吉祥图>>

内容概要

The cover design is from a Zhou embroidery screen of the Qing Dynasty used specifically for birthday celebrations. The screen contains a number of traditional Chinese auspicious symbols: The crane stands for the quest for longevity, the bat on the right is a homophone for "official" position and happiness. The large scroll held by God is a talisman for warding off disasters and evil spirits and this symbol, resembling frolicking in water, also stands for annual abundance, as fish and surplus are homophones: The pine tree, bamboo and plum blossoms, called the three winter companions by poets; convey connotations of longevity, youth and vitality. The peaches, glossy hollyhock and gourds, carried by the boys as well as the deer, are traditional symbols of longevity, happiness, position and achievement. The whole picture, overflowing with festive atmosphere, is perfect for a birthday celebration.
