前言

The year 2009 is a crucial one for China's reform and development. As the international financial crisis comes at a time of China's economic cycle, China faces serious challenges in the course of its reform and development. The international financial crisis, triggered by the US subprime mortgage crisis, is spreading around the world, and seriously affecting China's development. It affects China in all fields and at all levels: It is a huge attack from the outside, which drags China into the crisis as the country is deeply involved in economic globalization; it is also a profound attack from the inside, bringing about unprecedented challenges to China's economic growth, and exposing some innate contradictions in its economic growth pattern. Reform and development over the past 30 years have lifted China from the stage of subsistence up to the stage of development. Since 2000, the transformations of the economic growth pattern, social needs and government functions have brought about more pressures on the social fabric. The influence of the international financial crisis and the growing pressure from China's transformation pose two strategic challenges for China's reform and development in the next 30 years.

内容概要

《中国信心,全球危机下的中国改革(英文版)》内容简介: This book gives ideas and suggestions from the perspective of China's transformation in the spheres of economy, society and development for the Chinese government on how to deal with the international financial crisis and deepen the reform. It discusses the topic "crisis challenges reform" in five chapters: Chapter I analyzes the situation and contradictions that China faces for its reform under the dual pressure from the international financial crisis and domestic transformation, and then discusses the major tasks of further reform. Chapter II takes into consideration both economic growth in the short run and the transformation of the economic growth pattern in the light of medium and long-term development, and then proposes the reform package. Chapter III proposes social restructuring in view of expanding domestic demand, and raises ideas and suggestions for conducting positive social reform to handle economic pressure. Chapter IV discusses China's opening-up against the background of the international financial crisis, and urges the seizing of historical opportunities presented by the crisis to further implement the strategy of opening-up. Chapter V puts emphasis on improving government performance and reform, and raises several suggestions in the light of objective requirements that the crisis entails with regard to the transformation of government functions. The Afterword makes a brief analysis of China's reform in the current stage regarding its overall situation and basic features, and summarizes policies and measures for promoting structural reforms.

章节摘录

插图：1. The International Financial Crisis Is Not Over, and China Faces Unprecedented Challenges in Its Reform and Development Triggered by the US subprime mortgage crisis, this international financial crisis can be compared to the Great Depression of 1929-1933 in terms of the impact around the world. It may become worse and widen, and have an even deeper impact. In particular, its impact on the economy is under close observation. ( 1 )

The Crisis Is Unprecedented This international financial crisis is the worst in many years, and will result in a growth rate decrease in the major economies around the world. It is expected that in 2009 the US economy will decrease by one percent, while Japan and major European countries will also stay in recession. The growth rate of the world's output value decreased from 3.8 percent in 2007 to 2.5 percent in 2008, and it is estimated to fall to one percent in 2009. This crisis is also the biggest challenge that China has faced in its over 30 years of reform and opening-up. Over the past three decades, the external environment in general has been favorable for China's reform and development. Although China was affected by the Asian financial crisis of 1998, it managed to recover quickly. An important factor at that time was that the developed countries of Europe and the United States maintained steady growth. After the Asian financial crisis, China saw a remarkable increase in its foreign trade surplus and a steady growth in its foreign exchange reserve, becoming the country with the biggest foreign exchange reserve in the world.
