章节摘录

版权页：Literary stylistics and literary translation have rarely been considered in relation to each other. Despite the fact that the literary translator's choice of words, syntax etc. frequently raises stylistic issues and that literary translation therefore constitutes a congenial area of stylistic investigation, attempts at applying stylistics to literary translation have so far, in relation to English and Chinese at any rate, been scarcely made. Thus, in contrast with the more or less sophisticated stylistic analysis widely undertaken in Anglo-American in trilingual literary studies for the past thirty years or so (stylistics, it must be noted, was not introduced into mainland China until around 1980), criticism of literary translation, particularly of the translation of prose fiction, has remained remarkably traditional, characterized by general and impressionistic comments on style or by an intuitive analysis with a notable lack of sensitivity to subtle stylistic devices. To bring studies of literary translation up to date and to improve, as a result, the quality and standard of literary translating, there is surely an urgent need to replace traditional impressionistic approaches by more precise and more penetrating stylistic models and methods. The first aim of the present book is therefore to argue, mainly by way of practical analysis, for the usefulness and necessity of a stylistic approach to the study of literary translation in general and of the translation of prose fiction in particular.
