章节摘录

Lesson 14    Answers to the Questions    V.1 .D2.B3.C4.A    .    1.Because they want to improve their public image.They believe that reputations and jobs can be lost based on the smallest slip in rank.

2.Because they intended to make their colleges more selective. They thought top applicants might opt for more prestigious institutions , lowering the schools crucial “ yield ” and making it appear less desirable.    3.If accepted , enrollees tend to boost a school ’ S yield and its statistical cachet. But the process denies students the broader choice that comes with applying to more than one college and ties them to a school regardless of its financial aid offer.    4.The author believes the rankings have become an unhealthy force in higher education , because the time and money colleges spend gaming the magazines rankings are resources lost on improving education and serving their real consumers , the students.    5.According to her , the reasons for the flawed nature are the following : First , the weights used to combine various measures into an overall rating lack any defensible empirical or theoretical basis. Second , institutional wealth , faculty salaries and acceptance rates and almost entirely ignores the key question in evaluating a college : how well it teaches its students.    6.She suggests that leaders in higher education should refuse to give lip service to the system , and resist labeling students with numbers
