章节摘录

版权页：插图：（1）What causes a normal human cell to mutate and become a threat to its body？

（2）Scientists found a connection over two hundred years ago. （3）A major culprit, they discovered, is environmental agents—chemicals in the air you breathe, the food they eat, and the water we drink. （4）Today, the World Health Organization estimates that 60 to 90 percent of all cancers are associated with environmental pollutants. （5）Carcinogens are those cancer-producing agents. （6）They are predominantly hydrocarbons. （7）Such cancer-producing agents are found in cigarettes. （8）Scientific statistics disclosed by the Surgeon General of the United States support a strong link between smoking and lung cancer. （9）Of all lung-cancer patients, 90 percent are smokers. （10）Another environmental carcinogen is radiation. （11）The ultra-violet rays of the sun can cause genetic mutations in the cells of the skin. （12）Such mutations can lead to cancer. （13）In fact, extensive exposure to the sun makes skin cancer a common type of malignancy for light-skinned people. （14）Emissions, from radioactive materials, can trigger wild growth of cancerous cells. （15）The tragic cases of deadly cancers after the Chernobyl reactor accident illustrate this danger. （16）Certainly survivors of Hiroshima and Nagasaki have extremely raised cancer rates.
