章节摘录

On the English part , since now they were the absolute masters or rulers , their discrimination against China and the traditional Chinese culture was manifested much more strongly and more plainly. Roughly beginning in the 18th Century , the English gradually classified China as a nation resistant to contact and thus , in declining. In fact , some of them began to view the Chinese people and the Chinese culture with a more special , practical , even antagonistic view. Having won decisively over Qing China and become the new masters of the Colony , they felt naturally that their culture was superior to the Chinese one. Actually , in their eyes now the Chinese were nothing but racially and culturally the ultimate 'other'——a negative , blamed 'other' ( of. Munn , 1998 : 45 ) . Some of them believed that ' the Chinese are a peculiar people , and they do not like being interfered with. They do not understand us ; they cannot understand our ways' ( GBSC , 1847 : 346 ) . A more popular and representative view was that the Chinese people were ( source : HKAAR : 301 ) .....
