章节摘录

"A recent study in the Royal Astronomical Society Journal predicts that our oceans will evaporate in one billion years," he says. "This is not due to global warming but the natural effect of our Earth being dragged towards the sun, causing our beloved salt waters to just boil away." "As such we are advising citizens to book their Ocean City getaway now, before the ocean evaporates. This may be the last chance you have to enjoy all that Ocean City, Maryland has to offer." As the Mayor ends his words, scenes of the beaches, fishing, tourist shops and children banging on crabs are flashed across the screen. Donna Abbott, public relations director for the tourist spot, said the advertisement aims to be "humorous" and is not a serious appeal to urge Americans to take a vacation. "We understand the environment, but these days, we want to have people take notice and realize that they need to have some fun," she said. "We recognize these are challenging economic times with gas prices increasing and it was a reason to be very aggressive in our campaign this year to remind people they need to take a vacation." Ocean City, famous for its 10 mile (16 kilometer) long sandy beach, receives around eight million visitors per year.
