前言

Stylistics since its birth has been beleaguered with questions and challenges , most of which can hardly be claimed to have been resolved . This uncomfortable situation . I suppose , will never be changed granted that stylistics targets the elusive style as its object for study and adopt some modern linguistic theories as its analytical instruments . There is , perhaps , a fundamental dilemma for a discipline which lands itself in the paradigms of modern linguistics that require the object of study to be a certain . ty . Style , unfortunately , is not something whose certainty can be easily pinned down . Stylistics , in a sense , can be likened to anatomy , a comparison not many people feel pleased about , because of all the things we expect anatomy to find about the hu- man body , the last will be beauty and charm . Yet , anticipation from stylistics gener- ally is just to the contrary . The first and the foremost we want stylistics to contribute is to render up the beauty and charm of a text . For most people , the discussion of the style of a poem or a story is expected to reap a bumper harvest of beauty and mean . ing . This popular association of style with beauty may have been the saddest misfor- tune for stylistics . People feel betrayed when they find by tearing a text to pieces and tagging each bit of it with an occult linguistic label , the stylistic analyses only end up with some trivial interpretations . The present book is written not to discredit those challenges nor to contend that stylistic analyses are superior to or more scientific than other modes of textual analysis . Instead , we will present to the readers the challenges and problems as legiti- mate research questions through the introduction of the basic stylistiC issues and meth- ods .

章节摘录

The title of the report points to Muslim fury as the central message but the status of that centrality is subtly challenged by the photo that accompanies the text . Instead of having one photo demonstrating the Muslim fury , it places Sarkozy in the photo , with one finger pointing up showing no sign of regret or backing down . It is in this way that the report signals a stance while appearing to be neutral or without committing itself . Thanks to Barthes . Kress and Leeuwen , we now have some basic understanding of how the two modes interact with each other . But while research on the role of the visual literacy or the visual rhetoric has been gaining ground as witnessed by the publications in the field . the research on interaction between the visual and the linguistic has been somewhat underdeveloped . The shift , in the field , is a move towards a new literacy that gives centrality to the visual . We believe with the multimodal texts , we not only need to cultivate the visual literacy in addition to the linguistic literacy but also knowledge of how the two modes operate in coordination for some stylistic effects . What we have described here is just some preliminary explorations of the interaction . Much work needs to be done in this respect .
