Fudan University was resounded with 69 tolls of the Century Bronze Bell , apart from the wail of horns . Twenty three Sichuan students who had organized the ceremony via the Internet knolled the bell , meaning it to bless their hometown . Thequake affected the families of the university's 77 undergraduates and 42 postgraduate students , some of them losing their beloved family members or friends forever . Rain continued for quite a while in Shenzhen . Hundreds of people—including elders and children gathered spontaneously before the portrait Deng Xiaoping , the best-known sight of Shennan Avenue . They all stood in silence , in spite of the rain , while their umbrellas were just placed aside . A native of Meishan of Sichuan Province , a mid-aged man surnamed Xu came from Longgang to the portrait by bus . The house of his family was severely damaged and his old parents still lived in a tent . Tears and rain water trickling down his cheek , he shook his fist towards the sky , “ I believe that Sichuan can stand it , because Chinese are conscientious . ” Mr . Cui stood in silence before the portrait for quite a while . The day immediately after he left Sichuan on May 11 , a part of that beautiful land was torn apart by the earthquake . “ I was lucky , but I feel sad for those dead kids and compatriots . For the first time I felt how close I was to death . I've come to this particularly meaningful place to express my respects for the dead and blessing for the survivors . ” It was also drizzling in Hong Kong . In the HKEx ' s stock exchange hall , the traders received a notice several minutes ago that the opening bell due at 14 : 30 would not ring on May 19 . Different from three-minute mandatory suspension in the mainland stock exchanges , HKEx announced that during the mourning , its exchange system would operate normally and the members might decide at discretion whether to trade or not . “ We feel very sad for the severe casualties caused by the Wenchuan quake . We express our deep , sincere condolences for the affected people who have lost their relatives and for the survivors who will have to rebuild their life . Although our regards will not necessarily relieve their pains , we want to tell them that we share their feelings . We hope this could help see them through hard times , ” said HKEx Chief Executive Paul Chow . All the traders on the spot stood in silent tribute , bowing their heads . Meanwhile none performed transactions . When the tribulations hit , Chengdu was far stronger than people ever imagined . At 21 : 00 May 18 , a dozen of volunteers launched an all-city acknowledgements signature campaign at the pedestrian plaza , Hongxing Road . Private cars and taxis bearing a red sign “ THANKS ” printed in six languages including Chinese , English , Japanese and Russian were shuttling across the city . After the whistles faded away , utterances of “ Go , Sichuan ” still rose one after another at the Tianfu Square . In Tangshan , a city which suffered from similar trauma 32 years ago , more than three thousand people assembled spontaneously at the Square of Earthquake Monument , and numerous taxis parked silently in queues behind the crowds . On one side of the square was Tangshan ' S “ wailing wall ” , engraved with “ July 28 , 1976 ” . On that day , the city lost 240 , 000 people with another 160 , 000 severely injured , 3,817 permanently handicapped , and 4,204 children made orphans . At 14 : 28 , May 19 , over 80 wheelchair-bound people in the Tangshan Paraplegics Sanatorium who lost their legs in the Tangshan Earthquake 32 years ago bowed their heads in the courtyard of the institution . After that earthquake 32 years ago , Tangshanese had learned not to cry , because cry might influence other people ' S courage to live and let down those who helped them out of the disaster , Mr . Chen told the reporter , who lost his two sisters in the quake . At the same time , in London , more than 300 people from all walks of life gathered in the hall of China ' s embassy in the UK and stood in silent tribute for the victims of the Wenchuan Earthquake . The embassy set up a condolence book and a donation stand , open to the public at 9 : 00 a . m . through 18 : 00 from May 19 to May 21 . Immediately after the three-minute mourning , Mr . Khalid Malik , UN Resident Coordinator in China , went to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and signed his name on the condolence book . Embassies and consulates of many countries in China voluntarily flew their flag at half-mast that day and organized mourning activities . According to Mr . Malik , the United Nations stands ready to provide long-term support to help reconstruct the quake-hit areas . A three-day national mourning , announced for the first time for the ordinary people , reflects how the country respects and cares for lives and how the Chinese government and the people cherish and protect human rights , said Professor Ge Jianxiong at Fudan University . A common citizen and a state leader enjoy equal access to human rights and their lives are equally cherished ; the loss of tens of thousands of people should be mourned by the whole nation . Prof . Ge noted that , setting the national mourning is not only commemoration of the dead , but also a gesture of love and care in the eyes of their surviving family members which helps build their courage and confidence to live . It also reveals to the whole world that , the Chinese people and the Chinese government both show great concern for the existence , well-being and future of human beings .
