<<上海金融稳定报告2009>>

前言

The year 2008 was, in recent years, relatively tough for Shanghai's economic development. In the face of the global financial tsunami, Shanghai implemented decisively the economic policies of the central government under the correct leadership of the Communist Party of China Central Committee and the State Council. With the guidance of the Scientific Outlook on Development, it responded actively to the impact of the international financial crisis on its financial sector and real economy. As a result, Shanghai maintained steady economic growth momentum and its financial system remained stable. The Shanghai Financial Stability Report 2009 aims to show objectively the stability status and issues of concern in Shanghai's financial industry. It also aims to analyze and draw attention to potential risks to financial stability in economic and financial operations. The Shanghai Financial Stability Report 2009 is structured differently from those of previous years. Taking into consideration the current conditions of China's financial industry, adjustments have been made to part of the report's framework to enhance the organization of analysis. The present report consists of the following. Part I is an overview of Shanghai's financial stability status. Part II looks at the performance of Shanghai's economy and major issues that may affect financial stability. Parts III to V give an assessment of current conditions and stability status of banking, securities and insurance sectors respectively. Given the importance of infrastructure to financial stability, Part VI deals with infrastructure construction in the areas such as credit information, anti-money laundering and payment and settlement.

章节摘录

插图：1.1.2 The financial industry performed stably In 2008, banking institutions in Shanghai continued to increase. Their total assets and liabilities registered moderate growth. Both their non-performing loan (NPL) ratio and their outstanding NPLs dropped for the 7th consecutive year. Their capital adequacy ratio and provision coverage ratio rose continuously. Their profit making structure and profitability kept improving. In 2008, the operational performance of securities and futures institutions in Shanghai fell back amid market corrections. Corporate governance and internal control were further strengthened. Opening up to the outside world was in steady progress. Business innovation saw rapid development. The financing role of these institutions was reinforced. In 2008, Shanghai's insurance sector achieved stable growth with the number of market participants rising steadily. But some property insurance companies suffered heavy losses, the market share of foreign-funded insurance companies shrank and yields on insurance fund investments slightly dropped. 1.1.3 Financial infrastructure was further improved Efficient financial infrastructure is an important guarantee of the stability of the financial system. In 2008, new progress was made in the construction of Shanghai's payment and settlement system and credit information system. The anti-money laundering (AML) mechanism was further improved. These factors contributed to the stable performance of the financial industry and the safety of the financial system. In 2008, based on the construction of Shanghai as an international financial center and the coordinated financial development in the Yangtze River Delta region, the People's Bank of China (PBC) Shanghai Head Office kept the regional payment and settlement system in sound operation, which offered practical and effective basic services to regional financial stability. With regard to AML, work was improved in the area of monitoring and analysis, the coordination mechanism was perfected, cross-sector cooperation was reinforced in a comprehensive way and administrative investigations were pressed ahead.
