circumstances, Michael has significantly influenced the person I have become. In school he strives for excellence and achieves it. He has a unique ability to relate to people. He is committed, driven and self-confident. Emotionally, he is the strongest person I know. These are qualities that I also see in myself. Just as I appreciate Michael's qualities, he appreciates mine; when I asked Michael for three words to describe me, his answers were "loyal, driven and optimistic." I am committed to giving respect to those who are entitled to it, such as my parents, teachers and coaches. My friends and teammates are extremely important to me. My drive, self-confidence and willingness to chance failure have allowed me to take on challenges others might not consider. These challenges define my life by constantly providing inspiration. I try to live my life according to a Japanese proverb: "Fall seven times, stand up eight." Lastly, I have always been an optimist, and I love to laugh. My friends and family marvel at my jovial nature. Many times my family had considered placing me on a respirator after hearing me erupt in laughter at a Dave Barry book or an episode of The Simpsons. Last year, Michael told me he was gay. I was dumbfounded. Looking back, I realized that I had failed to notice emerging signs of his sexuality. I wondered how I, his best friend, could have failed to see them. Friends had approached me and asked if Michael was gay. My answer was always, "Of course not!"
