前言

Tibet Autonomous Region is gifted with grand natural scenery and diversified cultural heritage, which bestow the region with rich tourism resources. It is hard to count how many number-ones that Tibet has when compared with the rest of China, or in Asia and the whole world. Tibet has three world cultural heritage sites, five 4A-grade State tourism regions (or spots) , three State nature reserves, one State scenic region, one State forest park and one State geological park, the historical and cultural famous city of Lhasa and over 100 cultural relic protection units. Tibet fascinates tourists from home and abroad with its grandiose natural scenery, vast plateau landscape, charming holy mountains and sacred lakes, numerous ancient architectures and unique folk cultures. Tibet Autonomous Region lies in the southwestern part of China, at a geological location within 26°50' - 36°53' north latitude and 78°25' - 99°06' east longitude. Covering an area of over 1.2 million square kilometres, the autonomous region takes up about one-eighth of China. Among all the provinces and autonomous regions of the country, Tibet is the second largest following the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region. Its area equals the combination of Great Britain, France, Germany, the Netherlands and Luxembourg. To the north, it neighbours Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region and Qinghai Province; on the east and southeast, it is adjacent to Sichuan and Yunnan provinces; on the south and west, it borders Myanmar, India, Sikkim, Bhutan and Nepal, as well as Kashmir on a border line of 4,000 kilometres stretching from east to west. Tibet Autonomous Region has six regions: Shannan, Nyingchi, Ngari, Xigaze, Nagqu and Qamdo. Besides the two cities, Lhasa (prefecture level) and Xigaze (county level) , there are 71 counties in Tibet. Some of the famous cities or towns in Tibet include Zetang, Bayi, Nagqu, Qamdo, Shiquanhe, Gyangze, Zhangmu and others. The capital of Tibet Autonomous Region is Lhasa.
