章节摘录

版权页：插图：Civil cases typically involve disputes between individuals or groups of individuals. The three major areas of civil litigation are domestic relations law (e. g. , divorce and child custody) , tort law (e. g. , personal injury, property damage, or product liability) , and contract law (e. g. , written and oral agreements) . The following is an overview of the court procedures for civil cases.

Pretrial Procedures

A civil action is commenced by one party filing a petition. In most cases, this party is referred to as the plaintiff. In domestic relation cases, the person filing the petition is the petitioner. In the petition, the plaintiff sets forth the parties involved, the theories of recovery, and the relief sought. The petition is filed in district court and served or delivered to the opposing party. Generally, the opposing party is the defendant. In domestic relation cases, the opposing party is called the respondent. The defendant then will file pre-answer motions or an answer. An answer is a document denying or admitting liability. After the initial petition, the parties may file pretrial motions. These motions may request the court to dismiss the entire lawsuit, dismiss a claim or party, or limit the evidence to be presented at trial. The parties may also engage in discovery, a process to obtain information from the opposing party. A party may file interrogatories, which are written questions to be answered by the other party. A party may also take depositions, or ask oral questions, of a witness after the witness has taken an oath to tell the truth. Parties often reach a settlement or an agreement to resolve the lawsuit during this process. After the completion of the discovery process and the filing of any pretrial motions, the court will schedule a pretrial conference unless the parties have reached a settlement. During the pretrial conference, a judge and the lawyers for the parties discuss a wide variety of trial topics and the judge will set a trial date.
