章节摘录

The opera house in Santa Fe, New Mexico is one of the most beautiful in the United States. It is small and open, with one roof over the stage where the singer perform and another roof over part of the audience. This opera in the mountains is one of the best in the country, which may seem surprising because performances are only given during seven weeks in the summer, and because Santa Fe is very small city. They all hope to sing in famous opera houses like the Metropolitan in New York some day, and they work hard to become well known during the summer. The musicians and directors are experts who come from the best orchestras and operas in the country during their vacations. They enjoy working there because the music is always of the highest quality and because they like to live in Santa Fe, which is near both the mountains and the desert. It is very beautiful here in the summer. There is only one thing that some people do not like about the Santa Fe Opera, and that is the cold weather. Because the theatres open, performances cannot start before nine o'clock in the evening (when the sun goes down), and then the mountain air becomes very cold. Sometimes people complain about the cold air, but because the operas are so good, these people come back again: wearing warm coats.
