章节摘录

Global Citizenship Begins at Home 张欣山东大学 Ladies and gentlemen : Today , more than ever before , the world is a part of our everyday lives . We are linked to others on every continent socially through the media and telecommunication , culturally through the movements of people , economically through trade . . . . Everyone shares a part in running the earth ; everyone shares the responsibility of making the world a better place . This is what I ' ve learned from a grandma in the United States . At Times Square in New York City , a white - haired aged lady was seen stumbling up and down the square day in and day out . Although people mistook her for a poor homeless senior citizen , she was in fact watching and studying with close intent the pedestrians at the square , searching for anxious people in need of help . At the sight of a small child running aimlessly about all alone , she would come up and say , " Are you lost , my child ? Where is your mom ? " ' ' Seeing a depressed girl , gloomy with worry , she would step up and tenderly ask , " Baby , is there something upsetting you ? Share with me what is pressing on your mind . I might be able to help . " Time and time again , she saved young men and women , some jobless , some ready to give up entirely on everything . She also brought school children back to their homes as well as mentally-handicapped old folks who got lost and couldn ' t find their way back home . She rescued kidnapped girls on their first visit to New York , and even persuaded the heinous criminals to turn themselves in . Following this lady ' s example , many New Yorkers spontaneously united as voluntary rescuers under the slogan " Approach strangers and talk with them ! " As soon as they found someone in need of help , they would come up and talk with this person . Maybe we are still taught to be wary of strangers , but once we get beneath the surface . we ' ll find that there is more that unites US than divides US . Thus it is essential to be nice to strangers , no matter where we are , home or abroad , or who we are , Chinese or otherwise , as long as we strive to become qualified global citizens . Yes , in this globalized world , none of us could be completely independent from each other . Just as Thomas Paine said , " My country is the world . My countrymen are mankind . " Thank you !
