前言

I am honored to be able to write a preface to this volume. First I want to explain how this dialogue between Mr. Liang Shuming and me came about. I became interested in Mr. Liang's life and career as a graduate student at Harvard University, and took it as the subject of my Ph.D. dissertation. I gathered materials in Taiwan and Hong Kong, as well as sought out and interviewed [many of] his old friends and acquaintances. Because of the Sino-American political situation at the time, I never had an opportunity to go to China and meet personally the subject of my research, Mr. Liang. In the first part of 1973 I had my first opportunity to go to China. For an American to be able to go to China at that time was still extremely unusual. Why was I able to make the trip?

After President Nixon visited China, several Chinese delegations visited the United States in succession, and I served as their interpreter, and so became a channel of communication between the two countries. So in 1973, my wife and I had this rare opportunity to visit China. At the time, the first request I made of the Chinese was that I hoped I could meet with Mr. Liang. But because it was the time of the Cultural Revolution, and a very sensitive time, my wishes to pay my respects to Mr. Liang were not answered, so I could only return regretfully to America. In 1979, at the same time as my study of Liang Shuming The Last Confucian was published, the Chinese political situation underwent a tremendous change.

章节摘录

Alitto: So young !

Did your sister return to live in Zouping or...Liang: Yes, she returned to Zouping, but later left for Hunan. Alitto: Did she have relatives in Hunan or...Liang: She went to her daughter and son-in-law's home. Her daughter Dehui was married to my nephew. (Alitto: Dehui was married to your nephew?) He was a distant nephew of mine, not closely related. His father was a relative of mine, older than me, so he could be considered my elder brother. But he was a Hunanese. Alitto: Oh, the person you mentioned before for whom you are writing [a biography]. (Liang: Yes.) But you didn't tell me his name. All I know is that he was surnamed Liang. What was his name? Liang: Our generation of the Liang family all has "Huan" as the first character of our given names. His name was Liang Huankui. My original name was "Huanding." Dehui was given in marriage to the son of Huankui, who could be considered my nephew. Dehui married my nephew [as it were]. She still lives in Changsha, Hunan.
