前言

In 1979 China started the policy of reform and opening-up. During these thirty years of development, the tourism industry has gained valuable experiences in all phases of modernization, industrialization and marketization. However, in the early years, the real focus of the policy was to earn hard currency from the inbound tourists. Today a new strategy has been initiated to develop the three main tourist markets——inbound, outbound and domestic markets. In the early stages, the tourism management organizations integrated the needs of both the government authorities and the private entrepreneurs. The current situation is that tourism associations and commercial enterprises cooperate under the supervision of the government authorities. In the early years, the tourism operations were labor intensive with management mainly based on experience. Today's industry is driven by business innovations and supported by modern technology and capital operation. China's tourism industry not only merges gradually into the nation's economic and social strategic development system, but also plays a leading role in international tourism community.

插图：Image or reputation is the abstract copy of a thing in the mind of an individual. In the standard game theory of reputations, the conclusion that "reputation can strengthen a promise" is a milestone. In their works on sequential equilibrium in the game theory, Kreps (1990) described the reputation of the economic subject as a kind of "cognition", that is, under the asymmetric conditions, one party keeps updating to include the information delivered during the repeated games between the game players. On the other hand, the establishment of the reputation does not need direct contact with the participants in the game. For example, A could deduce B's behavioral pattern and fondness features by the interaction between B and C. He argued that reputation was the intangible capital for long-term survival (Kreps, 1990). According to the theory of trading reputation, typically that by Tadelis (1998), reputation is the intangible asset of enterprises, but is attached to and embodied in the name of the enterprise. Tadelis (1998) identified two kinds of reputation effects: Reputation Maintenance Effect and Reputation Start-up Effect. The former indicates that good enterprises generally tend to maintain their reputation more than the poor, and can benefit from it, which in turn encourages them to invest more into good reputation maintenance. In addition, it is easier for good enterprises (having more strength and competence) to keep their reputations than the poor. The latter implies that it is easier for good enterprises to establish their reputations than the poor, therefore, they under-estimate the ease of acquiring an existing good name (reputation) that is being assessed by the poorer enterprises in the market place. The Theory of Reputation Information regards reputation as information reflecting the historical record and characteristics (utility function) of a participant. The exchange, spread, shaping of reputation flow, reputation system and network of reputation information become the mechanism of information display, efficiently restricting its distortion, and contributing to increasing trading transparency and reducing costs involved in such trading. Shenkar and Yuchtman-Yaar indicated that reputation was the result of operations of the social mechanism, under which various stakeholders "can be regarded as members of the network, connecting with each other at different distances" According to Berger, reputation results from the oral communication of consumers.
