章节摘录

By partnering with firms in other regions of the world and using information technology to coordinate distant parts of their businesses, companies have shown that they can offer customers "anything, anytime, anywhere" around the world. Even well-known products are losing or have lost their national identities. BMW has traditionally been a German brand, but now the automaker builds cars in Spartanburg, South Carolina. In 2008, In Be, a Belgian firm, purchased the U.S. beer company Anheuser Busch. Miller Brewing Company, headquartered in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, is owned by a foreign firm as well, having been purchased by South African Breweries in 2002.⁵ But globalization is not of interest only to large firms. While estimates vary widely, approximately 70 to 85 percent of the U.S. economy today is affected by international competition. Even small companies partner with organizations in other countries. For example, Spring Hill Greenhouses in Lodi, Ohio, partners with florists through associations such as FTD and Teleflora to work with growers in Holland (tulips and lilies) and Colombia (roses) to serve customers around the world.
