<<荒野的呼唤>>

作者简介

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Jack London, who was to become one of the most highly paid authors of his day, was born in 1876, in San Francisco. He was the tenth child in his family, and consequently grew up in poverty. He had to work long hours for little pay; and he fell into the hands of thieves and cutthroats at an early age. In a few years, he turned to drinking as solace for his troubles.

Fortunately, before he was ruined by alcohol, London set sail on a seal ship. By the time he returned to San Francisco, many of his former companions had died. After a brief stint with the railway, London succumbed to his great desire to travel. He spent considerable time in the Klondike region of Alaska, which provided him with a setting for Call of the Wild. Here, too, London encountered the dog after which he modelled his hero, Buck.

Call of the Wild depicts the struggles of a spirited dog, learning to survive in a hostile world. He learns so well in fact that he wishes to leave civilization in the end to follow the "call of the wild."
