章节摘录

6 Common sense may dictate that since most countries require income tax returns signed by both spouses , husbands and wives should at least know what the other is earning. But this is not necessarily so , experts in marriage counseling and family law say. At Relate , the largest couples counseling charity in Britain , each couple is given an exit evaluation after a course of therapy. One question they are asked is , "Do you know how much your partner earns ?

"Many people say no , said Denise Knowles , a counselor at Relate , whose clients come from all levels of society. Dennis Grande , an attorney and family law specialist , described it this way. "They are both supposed to sign the income tax returns , but frequently it is a multipage document , and she signs in a matter of seconds without reading it. It is unusual if a wife reviews it or even asks for a copy. I think if the wife has enough to spend and is comfortable , she is not concerned about the technical issues or knowing the exact amount. " 8
Turbulence can arise when couples consider how much to leave to their children. That is especially true if there are offspring from multiple marriages and the woman is bringing a lot of assets into the union.
